

K-Love is as important to me as church is-if not more. K-Love is a very important part of my daily life. I wake up to the sound of John and Sherry Rivers in the morning and listen to my news updates and everything while I get ready to face the world. I have five brothers so K-Love is one of-if not the-things that keep me from hurting them very badly. K-Love reminds me constantly that God is watching over me and He will take care of everything if I just let Him handle it all. I think that if K-Love is taken away, I'm not sure that I would feel as safe in my city driving down the streets with the windows down and the bass up, speakers blaring K-Love. Family members of mine that I visit quite often don't live in the best neighborhoods, but I feel like the Lord is right there with me driving those streets like a body guard so I don't have to worry what will happen. Half the kids at my school are totally into K-Love and the other half are affected by the way we Christians act. K-Love gives me the courage to stand up for what I believe is right. I know several other teenagers who feel the same way. I am comfortable to share my faith with my friends because K-Love reminds me that it is normal to want to share your inner peace with others who are struggling. K-Love prompted me to get up off my booty and spread the word of God. I am actively involved in a Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA) which is attended by many students in the school. K-Love inspires me to be a model to my peers in the way Jesus was to his disciples. I hope that the FCC recognizes the fact that K-Love is so important to some people. I don't know what I would do if a different station took K-Love's place.
